

The Sun, Moon and stars can be used to measure time. It takes a day for the Earth to spin around, and a year for it to circle the Sun. By observing changes in the positions of constellations, astronomers worked out the length of a year so they could make a calendar.